

Roger Lee de Jesus

First degree in History (2010) and MA in Early Modern History (2012) with the thesis “O segundo cerco de Diu (1546). Estudo de História Política e Militar” (en. “The Second Siege of Diu (1546). Political and Military Study”). PhD in Early Modern History (2021 – project funded by the Portuguese Foundation for Science and Technology (FCT, I.P.), at the University of Coimbra, with the thesis “A Governação do “Estado da Índia” por D. João de Castro (1545-1548) na Estratégia Imperial de D. João III” (en. “The Government of the Portuguese “Estado da Índia” by D. João de Castro (1545-1548) in the Imperial Strategy of king D. João III”), at the University of Coimbra (Portugal), under the supervision of João Marinho dos Santos (FL-UC) and João Paulo Oliveira e Costa (FCSH-UNL).

He is currently working on the project “SAND – Sarilhos Grandes Between Two Worlds. Historical, archaeological and bio-anthropological study of a riverine population”, financed by the Municipality of Montijo and recognized as a Culturally Relevant Project by the Portuguese Ministry of Culture.

His area of research is the Portuguese empire in Asia, in the 16th century. He has focussed his attention on the construction of the Portuguese “Estado da Índia” in its multiple strands, especially the transposition of governance models and economic and military structures to the Indo-West Pacific world.

Researcher at the Centre for History of Society and Culture (University of Coimbra) and at CHAM - Center for the Humanities (FCSH/NOVA and Azores University).
